

POCKET MONEY

How to Make Small, Steady Money Selling Your Own Simple Digital Products From Your Phone

FAVOUR UBANI

Before You Begin

This little guide was written to be finished in one sitting. Don't rush to read it and drop it. Read it with your phone in your hand, do the small tasks as they come, and by the end of this weekend you'll have something real: your own digital product, ready to sell.

Before you dive in, I'd like you to know that by the time you finish this guide, you're going to have created your very first digital product, something real that people can actually buy from you. That's the hard part, and most people never get that far. So stick with me all the way to the end, because on the last page I'm going to show you exactly what to do next to turn that one product into steady income, possibly your first 100k in the next 60 days or less, not just a one-time sale.

One more thing. This guide is a gift, and gifts are meant to be shared. If you know a friend, a sister, a fellow teacher, a brother, a struggling hustler, anyone who has a skill but no idea how to turn it into money, please share this book with them. Send it to as many people as you like. You never know whose life you'll change with it.

| You cannot out-give generosity. The more people you help start, the more your own name grows.

My Story (And Why This Book Exists)

In 2019, all I wanted was to leave school and get a teaching job. Teaching has always come naturally to me, so I was excited to finally step into the classroom.

I had just left secondary school and I wanted to register for my JAMB exams straight away. But for some reasons, things didn't go as planned. I got a teaching job right after my WASSCE exams and worked for a few months in a primary school as a class teacher.

On December 18th, 2019, I quit that teaching job and walked away.

The pay was too little, and that month, just like the rest of the teachers, I didn't even receive my December salary. I was so pained I became teary.

I had worked so hard that month. I set exam questions for every subject (they were about 12 to 15 in total), prepared my pupils for their exams, marked the scripts, recorded the scores, and put together results for more than 40 pupils. It was a lot of work. A whole lot.

On top of that, I was one of the few teachers who stayed back at school till 7pm to get things ready for the school's end-of-year party. The next morning I was up very early. Without even taking my bath, I brushed my teeth and rushed to school to help with the arrangements and the cooking, came home briefly to bathe, then went back for the event.

I had never been so stressed in my life. It was written all over me.

And yet the proprietress looked me in the face and told me there was nothing for me to take home. No compensation that month. I was angry, but there was nothing I could do. I picked up my bag and walked home, recounting how much I had suffered. Only God knows what held the tears back until I reached my door. My mother was angrier than I was; she couldn't bear watching me suffer for nothing.

Early in 2020, I decided to go for computer training in preparation for JAMB. Then the news of the coronavirus spread, a lockdown was declared, and I had to put the training on hold.

Boredom pushed me online, searching for something to keep me busy. And somehow, I remembered: I could write. So I started writing again.

Then it happened. On a certain day in August 2020, working right here in this online space, I made my whole salary as a school teacher, and even more, in one go. Before then I had already been earning in small ways, writing and rendering little services online, from the comfort of my home, with just my phone and data.

In November 2020, I hosted my first paid class, teaching young people how to write and earn from it. I opened just ten slots. In less than three weeks, all ten were taken, even though my marketing back then was poor.

Since then I have hosted many more trainings, free and paid, and reached over 5,000 netizens interested in making a few bucks here and there online. Today I am able to make my full former salary, and more, in a single day.

I have watched too many people like me, especially teachers, struggle financially because of poor pay or salaries that never come. And the painful part is this: inside each of them lies a gift that could be turned into a product and sold for real money. But they are scared, doubtful, or simply unclear about how.

That is why Pocket Money was born, out of a desire to help people turn what they see as ordinary and common into powerful products that change lives and make them money.

If that's you, if you have knowledge, a skill, an experience, or a talent you've been sitting on, this weekend we're going to turn it into something you can sell. Let's begin.

First, What Are We Actually Building?

A digital product!

A digital product is something you create once and sell again and again, without restocking, shipping, or meeting your buyer face to face. No shop, no inventory, no delivery stress.

An ebook or short guide is the easiest one to start with, and it's what we'll build together in this book. Why an ebook?

- You already have the raw material inside your head: what you know, what you've lived, what you're good at.
- You need zero design skill and zero money to start.
- You can write, design, and sell it entirely from your phone.
- People buy guides every single day because they'd rather pay for a shortcut than figure things out alone.

Whether this is your very first product or your next one, the steps are the same. Follow along.

Step 1: Choose Your Niche

A niche is simply the specific group of people you want to help, and the specific problem you help them with. Not "everybody." Everybody is nobody. The clearer your niche, the easier it is to sell, because people buy things that feel made for them.

Think of it as filling in this sentence:

| I help [a specific type of person] to [solve a specific problem or reach a specific result].

For example:

- I help busy mothers cook fast, healthy Nigerian meals.
- I help new believers understand the Bible without feeling lost.
- I help small business owners write posts that bring customers.

Task 1

- Write out three groups of people you could help.
- For each one, write the main problem you could solve for them.
- Circle the one that feels most natural to you. That's your niche for this weekend.

Step 2: Find Your Product Idea

You do not need a brand-new, never-heard-before idea. Your product will come from one of four places you already own:

1. Your experience. Something you've been through and come out of. I turned my teaching struggle into a business. You can turn your years of waiting for a child, your years of battling childhood trauma, your ways of handling postpartum depression, etc, into a product.

2. Your skill. Something you can do that others find hard: writing, cooking, braiding, budgeting, praying, planning.
3. Your knowledge. Something you've learned and understand well, even if you learned it recently.
4. Your talent. A natural gift others compliment you for.

Your first ebook is simply you taking one of these and packaging it as a step-by-step guide that helps someone else get a result.

✓ Task 2

- Look at your niche from Step 1.
- Ask: what do I know or do that would help this person get one clear result?
- Write your product idea as a working title. Example: "7 Simple Nigerian Meals Any Busy Mum Can Cook in 30 Minutes."

Step 3: Understand Branding, and Pick Your Home Base

Your brand is not your logo. Your brand is what people feel and remember when they think of you: what you stand for, who you help, and the way you show up. When people trust your name, they buy from you. That trust is your brand.

To build that trust, you need a home base, one platform where you show up consistently. For most people starting in Nigeria, Facebook is the best choice: almost everyone is there, it's free, and it lets you post (texts, pictures, videos), message, and sell all in one place. WhatsApp is your second home, where warm people become buyers.

Pick one platform (Facebook is my recommendation) and commit to showing up there. Don't scatter yourself across five apps. You'd exhaust your energy faster. One home base, done well, beats five done poorly.

✓ Task 3

- Choose your home base platform.
- Update your profile so it's clear who you help. Put a simple line in your bio: "I help [who] to [what]."
- Make your name and photo clear and professional. You are the brand.

Step 4: Write Your Ebook Fast (Using AI as Your Assistant)

Here's the part that used to scare people: actually writing the book. It's not like that anymore. You can use a free AI tool like Claude (claude.ai) as your writing assistant. It will not do the thinking for you, you still bring the knowledge, but it helps you organise and write faster.

Open Claude on your phone's browser and try prompts like these, in your own words:

"I want to write a book on [your topic]. It is to help [who it is for and why they should achieve after reading]. Ask me 5 questions that would help you understand the book idea better."

After you answer the questions it asked, go ahead to tell it to write the book in simple English, including practical examples or illustrations, and to keep it within a particular number of pages.

Now you can read through, edit it to your taste. You can also prompt it again and again until it gives you something satisfactory. But never make the mistake of publishing without first reading through to confirm that everything is in place.

You can also write the book chapter by chapter instead of asking it to write it once if that makes the work easier and helps you proofread faster. Tell it exactly what your book is about, the tone you'd like to use, every other information you deem necessary, then demand that it asks you 5 questions that would enable it to understand your concept or project better. After answering the questions, it would write the book for you, all at once or chapter by chapter when you specify.

Always read what it writes, correct anything that isn't true to you, and add your own stories and examples. The book must still sound like you. AI is the assistant; you are the author.

Write your ebook inside Google Docs (free, works on your phone). Aim for something short and genuinely useful, even 10 to 20 pages is enough for a first product. Short and helpful beats long and boring.

And if you want to sell a video tutorial instead of an ebook, it's easy, too.

Decide whether you want it to be a faceless tutorial or one with your face on it. If it's faceless, you can easily find tons of tutorials on how to create faceless videos on YouTube.

If you want your face shown, sit down and record yourself doing whatever it is you want to teach your audience. Then follow the next steps to finish your process.

✓ Task 4

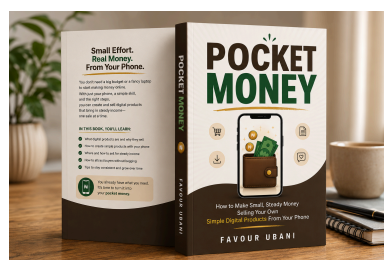

- Open Claude and ask it to outline your ebook chapters.
- Pick the outline you like, then write or generate one chapter at a time in Google Docs.
- Read everything back and add your own voice, stories, and examples.

Step 5: Design Your Cover and Flyer (No Design Skill Needed)

People do judge a book by its cover. A clean cover makes your product look worth paying for. You have two easy paths, both from your phone:

Using Canva (free): search "ebook cover" on Canva, pick a template, change the words to your title, swap the colours, done.

Using AI: you can ask an AI image tool like ChatGPT to generate cover designs for you. Try a prompt like: "Give me a simple, bold ebook cover design for a book titled [your title]. Author's name: [your name]" You can also mention colours you would like it to use or icons you want on the book cover. Then ask it to put it in a book mockup. The first image below is a book cover design, the other two are book mockups.

You'll also need a flyer, the single image you post online to announce and sell your book. Chatgpt can do that too. A good flyer shows: the title, who it's for, 3 to 5 things they'll get, the price, and how to buy. These are sample flyer designs for book promotion. All designed using Chatgpt.

See: https://youtu.be/MC7Xqf-HPkM?si=G1ctC73Z_0x_L1rX for a step-by-step tutorial on how to create book covers and flyers using Chatgpt.

✓ Task 5

- Design a simple cover in Canva (or use Chatgpt).
- Design a matching flyer that lists what's inside and the price.
- Keep it clean. One clear title, easy to read on a small phone screen.

Step 6: Price It (Start Low, On Purpose)

If this is your first product ever, price it low. This is not because your work is small. It's strategy.

- A low price removes fear. People take a chance on you easily when the risk is tiny.
- Your first goal is not big money, it's your first buyers and your first reviews. Those become the proof that sells your next, higher-priced products.
- It's far easier to raise your price later than to lower it.

A first ebook priced somewhere small and affordable (think impulse-buy range) will get far more buyers than a first ebook priced high. Get people in, deliver real value, and let them trust you. The bigger money comes next.

✓ Task 6

- Set a low, friendly starting price for your first ebook.
- Remind yourself: this price is to win buyers and trust, not to get rich today.
- Decide the price you'll raise it to later, once you have happy buyers.

Step 7: Upload It and Get Your Buy Link

Your buyers need a link that gives them the book after they pay. Two simple options, both work from your phone:

Google Drive: upload your finished PDF to Google Drive, tap Share, and copy the link. You send this link to people after they pay. When they click it, you'd be notified that someone is requesting access. Then you can give them access as viewers and approve. This way, no one can access the book unless approved by you.

Simsak (simsak.co): this lets you upload your product, set your price, and get a proper checkout link. The buyer pays and receives the book automatically, which saves you from sending it manually one by one or having to approve yourself.

Type simsak.co on your browser, register for free and upload your product information. Then copy your product link and share it alongside your marketing materials.

✓ Task 7

- Export your ebook from Google Docs as a PDF.
- Upload it to Google Drive (or a platform like Simsak) and generate the access link.
- Test the link yourself to make sure it opens properly before you sell.

Step 8: Marketing, Explained Simply

Marketing sounds big and scary. It's not. Marketing is just this: helping the right people know your product exists, and why it will help them. That's all.

You don't market by begging people to buy. You market by showing up and being useful, so that when you mention your product, people already trust you. A few simple ways to do this before and while you sell:

- Share your story and why you made this product (what inspired the book).
- Give small free tips related to your topic, so people see you know your stuff.
- Talk about the problem your product solves, and who it's for.
- Answer the common excuse (no time, no money) right in your posts.

✓ Task 8

- Write three short posts: one telling your story, one giving a free tip, one talking about the problem your book solves.
- Post them on your home base (Facebook) in the days around your launch.
- Every post should quietly point toward the fact that your book is coming.

Step 9: Announce Your Book and Run a Proper Campaign

A campaign simply means you don't just post once and hope. You build up to your launch, launch loudly, and keep going for a few days. Here's a simple weekend-friendly campaign:

1. Before: for 5 to 7 days, post tips and hints that something is coming. Build a little curiosity.
2. Launch day: post your flyer with a clear message, what the book is, who it's for, what's inside, the price, and exactly how to buy. Pin it. Share it to your status and WhatsApp.

3. During: for the next few days, keep posting, share a testimonial as soon as you get one, remind people, and add gentle urgency ("the low price won't stay forever").

Make buying easy. Tell people the exact steps in plain words: how to pay, and where to send proof so you can send their book. Confusion kills sales.

You can as well make a comprehensive list of all the people your book is for, and all the problems your book is going to help them solve. This list serves as your content guide for your entire marketing campaign. You'd never have to ask, "what should I post" or "what should I say?" You can just pick one of the problems on the list and elaborate on it: tell people how that problem affects or hinders them, and how your book solves that problem. Claude and Chatgpt can also help you achieve this. Prompt them!

✓ Task 9

- Plan your 3 posting stages: before, launch day, and the days after.
- Write your launch-day post now so it's ready to paste.
- Spell out the buying steps clearly: how to pay, and what to send you after paying.

Step 10: Follow Up (Where Most Sales Actually Happen)

Most people who are interested will not buy the first time they see your post. They get distracted, not because they don't want it. This is why follow-up is where a lot of your money is.

- When someone shows interest or asks a question, reply warmly and don't disappear. Check back with them.
- When someone says "I'll buy later," gently remind them the next day.
- After someone buys, follow up to make sure they're happy and ask how it's helping. Happy buyers give you testimonials, and testimonials sell your next product. When someone makes a good comment about your book, how it helped them, how they enjoyed reading it, how it's too good for the price, etc, keep records of their messages. You can blur their names and faces if they want to remain anonymous but one thing you should never do is fail to keep proof that your book delivered on its promise.

Following up isn't disturbing people. Done kindly, it's simply caring enough to help them cross the line they already wanted to cross.

✓ Task 10

- Make a simple list of everyone who shows interest.
- Set a reminder to check back with each one the next day.
- After a sale, message the buyer to ask how they're finding the book.

Your Weekend Checklist

You've just walked through the whole path. Here it is in one place, tick each box as you go:

- Chosen my niche (who I help + the problem).
- Picked my product idea from my experience, skill, knowledge, or talent.
- Set up my home base and clear bio.
- Written my ebook (with AI as my assistant) in Google Docs.
- Designed my cover and flyer in Canva.
- Set a low, smart starting price.
- Uploaded it and got my buy link.
- Planned my simple marketing and launch campaign.
- Ready to follow up and turn interest into sales.

If you've done these, you no longer have "an idea." You have a product. That's more than most people ever do. Be proud of yourself.

This Is How the Small Money Adds Up

Here is the secret nobody tells you: you are not meant to stop at one product. One product brings in a little money. But when you make another, and then another, those small sales start to stack. A little here from one guide, a little there from the next, and soon it is steady money coming in from products you own.

So do not treat this as a one-time thing. Repeat the pattern. Make one, sell it, learn from it, then make the next. Each product you add is another small stream of income working for you, again and again. That is what pocket money really means: not one big win, but many small ones that keep coming.

You've Created One. Now Let's Make Your First 100k From It.

Most people who finish this book never sell a thing. It's not because they can't. It's because they stop right here, tell themselves they'll "do it later," and never do. You already came this far. Don't be the one who stops now.

You made a real product. That's the part almost everyone quits before reaching. But here's what nobody tells you: creating it was never the hard part. Making money from it is. Staying consistent is. Knowing what to sell next when this one stops moving is. Not going quiet after week three because you ran out of ideas is. That's where most people disappear, not from lack of ability, just lack of a next step.

The ₦100K Bundle is that next step. Everything you need to turn this one product into your first ₦100K in the next 60 days, laid out for you, no guesswork.

Here's what's inside:

- 100 digital product ideas across the 10 most profitable niches, so you're never stuck wondering what to create next.
- A complete guide to selling without spending a single naira on ads.
- A day-by-day 100K-in-60-days action plan, so you always know exactly what to do each day.
- The exact method to get people DMing you to buy, instead of you chasing anyone.
- A content system that tells you precisely what to post and when, so you're never out of ideas.
- 10 phone-only hustles you can start today with ₦0.
- A tutorial on how to host your product on simsak.co a hosting platform.

Valued at ₦15,000. Today, ₦3,000, less than the plate of food you'll eat while scrolling past this without buying it.

This price does not stay here. Once this window closes, it goes back to ₦15,000, and the version of you reading this right now, motivated, fresh off making your first product, ready to actually go all in, will be gone.

You already proved you can finish something. Now prove you can build something.

Get the full ₦100K Bundle here for ₦3,000 only: <https://bit.ly/100kBundle>

You already have the gift. The bundle just hands you the map to sell it, again and again.

And remember, if this guide helped you, help someone else. Share it with a friend who needs to hear that their skill can become their income. Someone out there is one book away from starting.

With love,
